

Climate Change and the Law

with Jody Freeman

Jody Freeman, Archibald Cox Professor of Law, is a leading scholar of environmental law and climate regulation and leads Harvard Law School's Environmental and Energy Law Program. Freeman was the architect behind President Obama's agreement with the auto industry to double fuel efficiency standards and set the first federal greenhouse gas standards under the Clean Air Act, and she worked on the Biden transition on the administration's regulatory strategy for climate change. The new edition of Freeman's book, Global Climate Change and U.S. Law, is due out this year. Join Professor Jody Freeman in a VPAL Signature Event on recent developments in climate change and the law.
